Thomas La As another fellow Houstonian like our commenter, I have spent time in this home known as the Evergreen house. The Evergreen house is a staple to the Tobin hill and San Antonio Music community. Shows, I by touring bands, shows by local bands, shows by now famous bands. Albums recorded, art displayed, art created. These are the examples of local influence that has graced this location in the last 20 years. Fellow Houstonian you remember the old Walters or mangos? This is a landmark music venue. Think of the Dead House in haight ashbury, that house is still standing today in that thriving district. This was ours. Puro San Anto.

Signed, a former Houstonian now San Antonian.

Kyl Williamson My personal friends lived there for at least 5 years. I practiced there every week for 2 years. Sentimental value, sure - primarily. History isn't always made through some significant event or occupancy. Sometimes it is simply an amalgamation of many events and experiences that makes places like these invaluable. History is always being made... why must it have to had occurred decades ago to be deemed "of value"?

Philip Nelson Those would be sad buildings to lose!

Don Mathis This is what I sent to jessica@sapreservation.com : I am saddened to see old houses like these torn down. And I am even more dismayed to see box-like condos erected in vacant lots. The design of the new structures often clash with other houses in the neighborhood. And then, to add insult to injury, some of these new structures receive taxpayer abatements so as to make them 'affordable' for new tenants. What can be done to stop the demolition of San Antonio's history?

Patti Silva When was this built ? And if it's over 100 years old isn't it protected by the preservation historical society?

Robert Krieg Long Time Local Icon. We have precious few left. It would be a tragedy to lose these, as well.

Lisa Chavez The entire lot near it will also be renovated with more of those ugly shoe box condos.

Anisa Schell The house at 311 looks like it's in good shape. If the yard weren't asphalt, it would be a gorgeous home. The exterior seems pretty solid and it wouldn't take much to restore it. I am personally opposing this demolition.

Devin Walker It seems developers are bulldozing the entirety of Tobin Hill to build overly priced, generic, cookie cutter "modern urban homes" and I hate it. We, as a city, are at risk of losing our very identity at this rate.

Cherise Rohr-Allegrini Our D1 councilman has fought for preservation of other properties, like the Beacon Hill Elementary building. Regardless of your opinion on that fight, this would be a good time to remind him that this property is worthy of his fight to save it.

Where it all began, that place off evergreen was one of the first destinations where I fell in love with the local music scene, this amazing place is where I met so many amazing, talented souls who til this day i will never forget. Cheers to all the good years! It'll never die, it'll always be remembered and have life within our hearts ❤️

Wow, where DG TexasMusic (Dirty Genez) first had their first live recording and recording. Where I met friends that I'll know til the end of time. Where all and everyone could be themselves. So many nights, so many early mornings and so many amazing shows in this house. Sad to hear that it will no longer be of image and only of remembrance. Thatplace Offevergreen 🥺🥺🥺
